

Sinclair Broadcasting is forcing their stations to broadcast an alleged documentary about John Kerry ("Stolen Honor") a few days before the presidential election. This is an outrageous abuse of the public airwaves.

Sinclair uses public airwaves free of charge, and is supposed to serve the public interest. They should be held accountable to that interest, and should not be allowed to abuse it for their own private political agenda. There can be no question on the "news worthiness" of this particular example of blatant partisanship.

Here's another example of the dangers in relaxing long-standing rules regulating media ownership. Thank you.
